

Wednesday 11th October, 2017

It really is very windy in the garden today. The Goldfinches and House Sparrows feed bravely on seed heads and then fly off to safety.

We are thrilled that the meadow, where we reseeded, has come up with a variety of colour and fresh green.

The border near the gate is full of Golden Rod, Michaelmas Daisies and bright yellow Scabious, alongside Teasel seed heads. So much in flower.

Some shrubs seem to be less happy and we are considering where they are. Winds can also bring salt here. So, we are watching and learning.

It is the time of year for Chrysanthemums to start blooming. They are usually in flower by the 1st November which is why French custom uses them to remember loved ones on All Saints Day.

Have a wonderful week in the Jardin.
from Hengistbury Head Wildlife Gardeners