

Wednesday 21st November 2018

It looks like rain deer. No spelling mistakes there at all!

This morning was bitterly cold and wet. Many of us gardeners did not manage to get to the garden. Apparently colds and the cold also affect our gardening.

It is a time to look and see what needs doing. We did wander round and discuss what needs moving and cutting back, as well as seeing how many plants move to where they prefer to be as others take up the space and light they had previously.

Meanwhile in the Visitor Centre there was the sound of drills and creation as Phil led volunteers to make charming Reindeer. So, look out for them and the workshops.

The meadow is finally planted after all the hard work last week and nature will now do the rest. In spite of the leaves dropping and many plants conserving their energy for the winter there is still texture and colour in the garden. The dogwoods are establishing, the rosehips glinting and the Marigolds, well they just continue flowering.

We look forward to seeing you soon.
The Hengistbury Head Wildlife Gardeners.