

Wednesday 17th January, 2018

It is a truly beautiful day here at Hengistbury Head Wildlife Garden. The sun is shining on Blue Tits that seem to be exploring the nesting boxes around a group of Gardeners (who are also enjoying the warmth!)

We're trying out making supports from sticks collected by the Rangers, following the example of Kew Gardens. Let's hope the predicted strong winds show our structures do work.

Meanwhile, Primroses (prima rosa - the first flower) and Viuca are flowering in a spring-like fashion.

It is amazing how the Garden dies down and yet will be full in a month or two. That's one of the wonders of Nature.

Enjoy your week.

The Hengistbury Head Wildlife Gardeners