

Wednesday 6th September, 2017

Back in the garden after the Airshow and the Summer, the Michaelmas Daisies and Rudbeckias are blooming in areas that had been unassuming during the year. We were asked about the fruit of the Passion Flower which grows by the wall of the building, and we believe that the orange fruit may never be ripe enough to eat. The apple trees all have fruit this year.

The ancient wheat has been gathered in, but we are not sure who will mill the flour from it as yet. A record is being kept of the process.....exciting.

It has been lovely to chat with visitors today. Some from Yorkshire have taken the idea of the bug hotel with a sedum roof and intend doing it at home.

Others visit regularly and were interested to learn that the chamomile used for the lawn is different to that used for tea. The lawn is Chamomile nobile 'Treneague'.

We look forward to seeing you at Hengistbury Head Wild Garden soon.
